Moderate Leaders. The only hope lies in moderate employers and moderate labor leaders, not revolutionary steps or "extremist" leaders on either side, Hoover said.

The Kansas industrial court law is practically a reproduction of the Australian labor act, Hoover said. "I do not want to condemn the Kansas act in spite of the failure of the Australian acts to affect the results anticipated," he continued.

"The Kansas act is an experiment sail. It may be possible to develop something worth while. My own opinion, however, is that the act cannot succeed. In Australia the number of strikes and dislocations is as great as in any other country without them.' Up To Law.

The Kansas law, Hoover said. would ultimately determine fair in the interests of labor.
